SEASIDE

HISTORIC—Seaside, The Trail's End City, so called because it is the end of the Old Oregon Trail and it was also the end of the trail of the Lewis and Clarke expedition of 1805-6. Seaside was at that time an Indian village of the tribe of the Clatsops. Here Lewis and Clarke came to make their salt from sea water for their return journey and their old salt cairn, carefully preserved, remains as a monument to this expedition.

MODERN—Seaside is now a noted summer resort, the playground of the Northwest—easily reached by a paved highway and by rail. Chief among its many attractions is the concrete walk or "Prom" which extends along the ocean front for 8,000 feet and which is a marvelous piece of engineering skill. Seaside is provided with every facility for amusement and recreation: two excellent golf links, two natatoriums, two dance halls, fishing in both sea and mountain streams and charming walks and drives. Modern hotels, cottages and camp ground provide ample housing-room. Just south of Seaside stands Tillamook Head over 1,000 feet in height. An excellent trail leads to the top, the view from which is well worth the climb.
